

Ayana Wallace

Ayana Wallace, MS, is the Training Specialist of Ujima, Inc.: The National Center on Violence Against Women in the Black Community, a project of the DC Coalition Against Domestic Violence. Ms. Wallace's career began as a client case coordinator providing direct services and support to victim-survivors who sought emergency shelter. Ms. Wallace has been instrumental in the national implementation of the Lethality Assessment Program—Maryland Model (LAP) and has served as the lead trainer for the Maryland Network Against Domestic Violence, the state coalition. Ms. Wallace has worked for over a decade in the domestic violence field providing both direct service to survivors and technical assistance to advocates, law enforcement, community-based partners, and faith communities. Ms. Wallace has extensively studied the theory and implications of privilege, oppression, and intersectionality and strives to highlight the experiences the marginalized and/or underrepresented. She is a writer, poet, animal advocate, and mom of two fur-babies.
